ABSTRACT

First Generation Learners (FGLs) are students who are the first in their families to attend college and are, therefore, coming from backgrounds without any experience of a higher education setting. The consequent lack of 'insider' knowledge that comes from attending such institutions creates significant barriers for the FGL in approaching and adjusting to University education and culture. The paper, through semi-structured interviews and online surveys, will attempt to answer the following three questions concerning the University experience of FGLs in Indian universities:

1. What are the major challenges that FGLs encounter in the course of their University life?
2. What makes the FGL experience unique? In other words, how do the experiences of FGLs and Non-FGLs, i.e students who are NOT the first in their family to attend college, compare and to what extent?
3. What interventions can be made and exposures provided in order to support the FGL journey?

Overall, the paper will provide comprehensive insight into FGL experiences and how these experiences can be shaped to make the student's journey more fulfilling. We believe such findings would be useful to institutions, policy-makers, and also to first-generation learners.
